

Data Analyst

United Kingdom 3 weeks ago

Full-time · Entry level

1,001-5,000 employees · Hospital & Health Care

The Data Analyst Will Be Responsible For

- Working closely with the Population Health Consultants, clinicians and care professionals to design and produce analytical tools
- Building complex but easy to use data visualisations to customer requirements
- Supporting the delivery and implementation of the population health software product into health and care organisations
- Work on customer sites as required
- Supporting the benefits analysis of health and care interventions
-

Qualifications And Skills

- You should have a fascination with finding, interpreting, and illustrating data.
- Experience of using SQL databases and writing SQL queries at advanced level for data query and manipulation.
- Experience of another programming language is desirable (R, Python)
- Clear understanding of data validation and interpretation techniques
- Good numerical skills and good attention to detail
- Experience in translating real world requirements into analytical reporting
- Knowledge of statistical techniques and the application of data science

Desirable

- Knowledge of information governance rules and requirements within health and social care
- Knowledge of data science, modelling, statistical analysis including R or Python
- Experience of testing and quality assurance of software
- Experience of agile development methodologies
- Experience of handling large data volumes such as data tables over a billion records